The 90° Spiral exists as the "backbone" of our existence. A line represents tension; a sphere represents pressure. Without a surface of distinction they mix and yield chaos, then nothing. These are the extremes, preserved always, where they exist, by some underlying form of motion. (Life)

Chaos contains motion. Motion creates a field of both tension and pressure. The natural resolution takes the 90° spiral form. This begins the evolution of order out of chaos. The 90° spiral, and life, remain cycling at the balance point between order and chaos. (One cannot exist without the other.)

A hurricane displays the 90° spiral's power of enlistment ~~from~~ (and consequences) but in this form it is incapable of completion, doomed to either perpetual growth, or disintegration. (see human institutions) A tornado, on the other hand, displays what happens when the essential reflecting hemisphere is present (mutual excitement). In this form the storm reduces scale to a self-possessed entity. This is the form of recirculation responsible for an atom's potentially eternal life (perpetual motion) which underlies the possibility of ongoing life on earth. (Evolution)

But we long ago ruled out from reverence (and thereby understanding) the preservation of Chaos - Life's re-lease; self-purging, rot and disintegration - the essence of ongoing fertility. (Or indeed the mixing of physics with human sciences.) Striving for eternal life our social system sustains one form of knowledge to avoid the disintegrating influence of the other: Physics does not deal with Creation, but leaves the teaching to ancient texts and fables: Religion denies a physics of Creation, and to mix Physics with Religion yields Chaos. The fear has led to little understanding of either nature or ourselves because there can be no clear distinction made.

Fear gives chaos the power to sever the connection to the saving hemisphere, giving the power of self-preservation to the gathering storm. (In fear of chaos, we allow no alternative but chaos.) The importance (and power) of the 90° spiral, central to Nature's self-preservation, is unknown to science because its vision of Origins is violence and its concept of energy is the disintegration of something previously created Nature's way. Our way is inverse to Nature's way because we are conditioned to make sense by reflection - by inversions of sense and imagined truth, hardened into conviction by a consensus of artificial logic.

(understanding ES requires a disintegration of beliefs - letting go the past.)
